Resort at Houghton Lake.

Nels Michelson, of the N. Michelson Lumber Co., says that their company has concluded to subdivide a part of their property located at Houghton Lake, into lots suitable for resorters.

Houghton Lake is the largest lake within the boundaries of Michigan. It is about seventeen miles long and about seven miles wide. It is also considered that there isn't any better fishing anywhere, especially in this true on the south shore, where are located that portion of the enormous holdings of this firm, that will be divided up into lake front lots. Houghton Lake is alive with nearly all kinds of fish, including pike, bass, perch, and others. Five pound black and green bass are no novelty here; also pike weighing from three to twenty five pounds are every day occurrences during fishing season. On the shores of this lake there are fine hunting grounds, abounding in partridges, deer and other game.

For years hunters and fishermen have sought out this region for recreation and sport. The shores of Houghton Lake are sandy and free from mire; in fact, one can wade into the water for several rods in almost any part of the lake, thus making bathing and boating safe and delightful. At this lake there is a combination that lends interest to the resorter and sportsman alike, and is rarely equalled in any part of the country.

That portion that they expect to subdivide contains about 490 acres and is all cleared and when platted will be ready for the carpenter and builder. The company also intend to establish a hotel there soon. They own thousands of acres of land here and control about twenty miles of solid lake front. Mr. Michelson says that they intend to subdivide the balance of their lake front lands in the near future.

This land was acquired for lumbering purposes and there still is sufficient timber here to keep the Company's mill, at Michelson, running for about twenty years. The mill is located about a mile from the lake, on the Muskegon river which is the outlet to the lake.

The big Michelson farm is located on the south side of the lake, and is known throughout Michigan for its extensiveness, and for the enormous crops that are raised and are marketed every year, besides thousands of head of live stock.

The G. R. & I. runs within a mile of the lake, terminating at Michelson, but probably will be continued on to the lake as this is destined to become one of the greatest resort sections in the state. This land has never been placed upon the market and there is little doubt but that it will be grabbed up in a hurry as soon as the company is ready to make sales.

This will be a new resorting region for the people in Missaukee, Clare, Isabella and Gladwin counties, where there are but a few lakes of any size, as well as people from all over the state.

FREDERIC C. MARTINDALE.

Candidate for Governor on Republican Ticket.

Frederic C. Martindale is out with his announcement that he will be candidate for nomination of governor on the Republican ticket.

He says that some months ago, when he announced his candidacy for the Republican nomination for governor, he stated that he had served the people in the State many years as state representative, state senator, and secretary of state, and that he was asking the support of the people upon his record in these positions. At the last primary he was defeated for the nomination for governor by a very few votes and was afterward nominated at the fall convention for secretary of state and had the satisfaction of leading the Republican state ticket by several thousand votes. Many prominent Republicans believe that had he received the nomination for governor he would have been easily elected, and now, with a greatly extended acquaintance, he feels confident of success in the next primary.

ILLUSTRATED NEW CIRCULAR.

Some Idea of the Contents of New Publications of the Bureau.

This week we reproduce a part of the illustrations used in the new circular recently issued by the Northeastern Michigan Development Bureau.

While the cut shown is from only Crawford county, yet the bureau folders show views from each and all the counties that are members. These views being of agricultural and industrial scenes, depicting the many activities of Northeastern Michigan.

The bureau circular is sufficiently unique to draw passing attention. Since a large addition was to be printed and used rather lavishly, it became necessary to have something which would be inexpensive yet attractive. Furthermore a return card was necessary. This has all been accomplished by having a folder 7x20, on rather light paper, with a separate card for return. This card being addressed to the Bureau and having the bureau's map in two colors on one side while on the reverse side are listed various subjects for checking by the inquirers, this part being so covered by the folder that only the name and address appears.

Instead of using the familiar wire clip for holding the folder closed and postal therein, the bureau makes use of a large red sticker on which is the word "Special" in white.

When mailed to prospective interested parties it is not even necessary for the recipient to sign his name to the card, that being already done. It is only necessary for him to check the items in which he is interested, and mail. The folder contains items of interest and an article on the advantage of Northeastern Michigan. Then on the edges of both sides are illustrations, being from five to seven for each county, similar to those shown. Thousands of these folders are being distributed, and each mail brings the return postal asking more definite information.

Will Write History of Crawford County.

Grayling, Mich., Oct. 27, 1913.

To all interested in the future welfare of Crawford county:

As I have been chosen by the Michigan Historical commission to collect material for the history of Crawford county, I desire the assistance of all who can furnish anything pertaining to the early history of the county. I desire especially, first, to obtain biographies of all the early settlers who have passed away. Next, all who have resided in the county thirty years or more and as far as possible, let this include personal experiences (this would include their families also.)

A history of all schools, churches, fraternal societies, clubs and anything that has tended to make the county as prosperous as it is today. The same can be left at the office of the Avalanche or directed to me at Grayling, as I wish to see them properly filed and keep a record of the same. The time is fast approaching when many who can now furnish valuable information will have passed away and we fully realize "that there is no time like the present" to secure much which may be lost through procrastination.

I am ready to assist anyone at any time and will see that all have full credit for any assistance rendered.

MAKING GOOD ROADS BY CONVICT LABOR

DONALD F. BIGGS

CAMP OF CONVICT ROAD WORKERS

HERE is nothing particularly new or revolutionary about the working of convicts upon the public roads. For many years it has been the custom in most of the cities of this country to place vagrants and other minor offenders in the police dragnet at work upon the streets and in a number of states the inmates of the penitentiaries have been employed at various times in the construction of highways.

But the modern idea of convict road labor is new and it is only just beginning to appear in various parts of the United States. The old idea—where convict labor was employed on the roads—was merely to utilize the labor of the convicts to the best advantage to the state—to make the convict produce as large a revenue as possible. In order to repay the state for the expense of maintaining its penal institutions. Into the new idea, there has entered an element that was unthought of formerly. This new element has to do with the reclamation of the convicts, the development of their moral senses and their ultimate return to the world as law-abiding citizens, rather than as human derelicts, made unfit, through their prison life, for any further attempt to lead an honest existence.

The new idea of convict road labor is to aid both the state and the convict; to give the state the benefit of the labor that can be utilized to greater advantage in this way than in any other, and to give the convict the benefit of the outdoor life, the freedom from the restraint of prison walls and the different character of discipline that makes it possible for him to regain his self-respect.

In working out this new idea, especially with the view to the reformation of the convicts, old ideas of prison regulations necessarily have disappeared and the whole system of discipline has been revolutionized. The honor system has taken the place of armed guards. In many instances, and the road "camp" has replaced the stockades and "bull pens" of the old days of convict road labor.

Colorado was one of the first states to adopt the new idea. New Jersey began experiments along the same line a short time later. President Woodrow Wilson, then governor of New Jersey, is given credit for the inauguration of the convict road work in that state along the new lines. Several other states have fallen in line, each working possibly in a different way, but toward the same general end.

Illinois is the latest state to make a beginning in this work. A force of nearly one hundred convicts was recently taken from the penitentiary at Joliet and placed at work on the roads. Armed guards were dispensed with and the men were placed upon their honor. The convicts pledged themselves to make no effort to escape and the authorities are relying upon their keeping this promise.

In this case a tendency soon developed on the part of the people to undo the idea of giving the convicts greater liberty and pleasure. A plan to give the convicts an automobile ride and theater party in a nearby city was proposed to the authorities, but Governor Dunne vetoed this program and let it be understood that while it is planned to give the convicts greater freedom than they have been accustomed to within the prison walls and to add them in getting a better view of life, the fact that they have been sentenced to pay a penalty for infraction of the state's laws must not be forgotten and the men must be made to realize that punishment awaits such violations of the statutes.

The working of convicts upon the roads in Colorado was made possible only a few years ago by act of the legislature. The system has been generally adopted throughout the state during the past two or three years, the various counties co-operating with the state in the improvement of the highways. The result is seen in many miles of splendid roads built by the convicts.

The honor system was adopted simultaneously with the placing of the convicts on the roads in Colorado. All of the convicts were not turned loose from the penitentiary without guards, but a certain percentage of the prisoners, including those having the best prison records, were taken from the penitentiary first as an experiment. As the success of the experiment seemed evident to the authorities, the number of "honor" men was increased and more than 50 per cent. of the convicts were finally removed from the prison and placed in the road camps.

Warden Tynan and other prison authorities declare the experiment has been even more successful than they anticipated.

"During the last three years we have had more than one thousand individual prisoners in the convict camps," says the warden. "These men,

In New Jersey the convicts are handled a little differently, but the object is the same. Here the guards have not thrown away their guns, but the firearms are not in evidence and the casual visitor to the convict camp scarcely can tell which are the keepers and which convicts.

Woodrow Wilson, when he was governor of New Jersey, thought he saw a way to solve some of the problems presented by the state prisons. He outlined his idea to the state prison labor commission and turned over to that body, together with the state road commissioner, the task of working out his ideas. The result of President Wilson's suggestions is "Don't Worry Camp," the first of the road convict camps to be established in New Jersey.

This is very much like any other summer camp, except that it is better equipped. One large room holds the convicts' beds, while in a projecting ell there is space for five guards, whose beds are so placed that every square foot of the convicts' quarters can be seen through a glass partition. This is the only suggestion of surveillance, except for the locks that are placed on the doors at night. The convicts' room contains a shower-bath and other facilities. The ventilation is scientific and the floor, walls, ceiling and beds are spotless. Two former chefs, now convicts, preside in the kitchen and prepare the meals, which include meat twice a day and plenty of fresh vegetables.

All the buildings in the camp were constructed by the convicts themselves, without any outside help, save where expert workmanship such as could not be furnished by the convicts, was needed. After the camp was completed the convicts were put to work on the nearby roads. Asphalt roads are to be laid and culverts and bridges constructed, and in this connection is seen one of the chief benefits of the new system, so far as the convicts are concerned. The prisoners will have an opportunity to learn the masteries of scientific road-making, a profession which is not overcrowded. Those prisoners who show an interest in the work will be promoted to responsible positions and will be in a position to secure well-paid jobs when their terms expire, the authorities believe.

While these few states have been taking the lead in the efforts to solve the problem of convict labor, other states have been studying the question of how best to direct the labor of the state's ward, both for his own interest and that of the state, and rapid progress is predicted along these lines during the next few years by those familiar with penal conditions throughout the country.

Arrested the Ambassador.

Sir Arthur Hardinge, who has been appointed British ambassador at Madrid, can tell of not a few strange experiences that seldom fall to the lot of the diplomat. While on duty in Portugal last year he was arrested by a policeman who believed him to be a conspirator.

It was only after much telephoning, telegraphing and explaining that Sir Arthur was able to prove his identity and then, of course, apologies were profuse.

England wants boxing added to the 1916 Olympic games at Berlin.

NOW, WHO HAS DIRTY HANDS?

Yours Are Only Relatively Cleaner Than Those of Your Neighbor, If You Reflect.

"This is a lavatory episode and not so much of an episode at that, except that it made me think a couple of thoughts which I had hitherto overlooked," said the man with the package that was patently a pound of candy. "Maybe you'll call it an epigram. I don't know. But I heard it in one of those places where the lions roars at white-bowls and hot and cold piglets and paper towels and tipsy bottles of liquid substitute for soap are."

"There were two boys there, office boy type. One was washing his hands. Also a man, office man type, who joshed the boy who was washing. Told him he needed a bath by the looks of as much of him as was visible—and such as that. The boy hotly denied that he was filthier than the average. Finally the merry kiddier went out. The accused boy turned to his companion and exclaimed, partly in indignation and mostly in amusement, at the absurdity of the idea."

He thinks everybody's hands is as clean as his."

"Now that struck me as right, illuminating. I have long wondered how boys can live with dirty hands and uncombed hair. I have a young son of my own and I know that no amount of moral suasion will make him wash and comb regularly. But don't you see, a boy's hands are not dirty unless they are dirty for a boy's hands. It's that same old stuff over again about everything being relative."

That boy who seemed to think cleanliness was an immutable condition, something that just happened and couldn't be avoided or attained, was my boy's benefactor, though he didn't know it. I realize now that a boy's hands are clean when they don't look it to the parental eye. I'll not bawl out my dear boy for coming to the dinner table with grimy fingers any more. I know now that it will all come right in time. When he gets to be as old as I am, his hands will be as clean as mine's."

"One more precious thought: Did you ever sit in a car alongside a delivery boy or a molder or a laborer and shudder in ill-concealed horror at sight of his dirty hands or face? You are in the habit of supposing that your own hands and face are clean, I suppose? Well, they are not, except relatively. Your hands may be clean compared to the boy's, but they are disgustingly dirty compared to comparatively clean hands, such as a surgeon has when he's all ready to go ahead with the slashing. Think it over and don't let yourself get puffed up with false pride."

How It Feels to Freeze.

Freezing to death is preceded by a drowsiness which makes the end painless, the body actually feeling warm and going comfortably to sleep. Experiments have been made with animals to show just how freezing to death proceeds. In one of these experiments, in which the animal was placed in a temperature of from 125 to 150 degrees below zero, the breathing and heart beats were at first quickened, the organic heat of the body actually rising above the normal, which is 98.6 degrees Fahrenheit. This showed a sudden and intense effort on the part of the functions to preserve the body's temperature. Then violent heart action gave out suddenly, and death came when the temperature of the body dropped to 71 degrees Fahrenheit—Popular Mechanics.

"Rebber Dollar Sale."

A "rubber dollar sale" was the title of a store's recent announcement intended to emphasize the idea that during the month a dollar could be stretched to cover more than its real value, according to the Clothier and Furnisher. To give forceful illustration, ten one-dollar bills were attached to the placard and were so folded that the figure one showed only on the bill at each end, so that at first glance the group looked like a much stretched single dollar.

The perfect baby had reached the age when he could coo, an accomplishment in which he indulged himself most of the time when not otherwise engaged. "He is the most welcome visitor I ever had," said the mother, proudly. "He just lies and talks to me by the hour." "Isn't that nice," replied the caller. "So unlike most visitors—they just talk and lie to you by the hour."

Golfer—I'm sorry to trouble you, madam, but you are directly on the line of my drive. Will you kindly move one way or the other? Woman (comfortably seated on the ground)—Certainly not. I heard you shout very rudely, but I've no intention of moving. I should have thought that a gentleman, when he saw me here, would play the other way.—London Punch.

A Century Hence.

"And will you be mine, Helene?" "Yes, Horacio!"

In a transport of joy he seizes the hand of the young girl and shakes it. To be sure hand-shaking has been declared unsanitary by the best medical authority, but what has such a tumultuous love as theirs to do with considerations?—Puck.

How "Teetotaler" Originated.

Teetotaler, the term applied to an abstainer from all fermented liquors, originated with Richard Turner, an artisan of Preston, England, who, contending for the principle at a temperance meeting in 1833, asserted that "Nothing but teetotal will do." The word was immediately adopted.

First Stone Arch Bridge.

Said to be the first stone arch bridge erected in this country, the "Choate Bridge," built by Town and County 1764, as the inscription states, still stands, a monument to the builder, Col. John Choate, at Ipswich, Mass. It is seemingly as strong as ever.

IDEAS FOR HALLOWE'EEN.

The last of October is the season when we revel in the beautiful autumn fruits and vegetables. Pumpkins and gourds lend themselves so well to decoration; the rich red of the apple, the blue and purple of the grape and the brown of the chestnut gives a richness of color not found any other time of year.

The chestnut is the nut par excellence for this season, and its delicacy of flavor makes it always a delight.

Chestnut Entree.—Mash a pound of roasted chestnuts to a paste, season well, add two well beaten eggs and a teaspoon of chopped parsley. Pour into buttered timbale cups and set in a pan of hot water. Bake twenty-five minutes and serve with a cream of rich tomato sauce.

Delicious soups may be made of chestnuts. Cook a quart of the meats in boiling water until the skins will come off. Remove them and drop again into boiling water, add a small onion and a stalk of celery, a blade of mace and a bay leaf. When the nuts are tender, mash through a sieve, return to the fire with two quarts of white stock, a teaspoonful of salt, a few dashes of paprika and a pint of hot milk. When the milk boils, remove from the stove and add two beaten yolks and a half cup of cream. Serve in bouillon cups.

For an evening entertainment, nuts, apples, popcorn and sweet cider are the refreshments most appropriate. If one wants something more substantial, hot coffee and doughnuts are great favorites.

Chestnut Bavarian Cream.—Soften half a package of gelatin in a half cup of cold water. Press a cup of preserved chestnuts through a sieve. To this puree and the gelatin add a fourth of a cup of sugar and two tablespoonfuls of vanilla. Set the mixture in ice water and stir constantly until the mixture begins to thicken, then fold in a cup of whipped cream and one cup of thin cream. Continue to fold the two mixtures together until the mass will hold its shape, then put into small molds, decorated with glace or maraschino cherries, cut in bits. Dip the molds in hot water when ready to serve, and they will unroll smoothly.

Before you touch the colored cherries, or start to open up the berries. This may ward off many worries. Read the label.

Soup bears the same relation to the dinner that a doorway bears to the house.

SOMETHING GOOD TO EAT.

Here is a prize recipe for pound cake which somebody will like to try: Cream two-thirds of a cup of butter to a cream, add a cup of sugar, the well beaten yolks of four eggs; add a little of a cup and a half of flour sifted with a teaspoonful of baking powder, and then add a teaspoonful of milk. Add the rest of the flour and the beaten whites. Bake in a paper lined tin forty minutes.

Raisin and Celery Salad.—Cut in small pieces two cups of celery, two oranges broken in bits and two-thirds of a cup of raisins, seeded and plumped over steam. Add a cup of grated apple to a cup of mayonnaise and cover the mixture with this. This is an especially delicious combination.

Cassole.—This is a famous French dish, and is both historical and appetizing. Soak over night a quart of lima beans; in the morning bring to the boiling point, then drain. Add fresh boiling water, a teaspoonful of salt, and let them cook until nearly soft. Place in a casserole two cups of cold cooked chicken or duck, add the beans, drained, an onion, sliced, half a cup of strained tomato, a quart of hot broth and a teaspoonful of kitchen bouquet. Bake one hour, uncovered, sprinkle with a little chopped parsley, brown and serve.

A new way to serve apple dumplings is to set muffin rings into an agate pan, fill the rings with sliced apple packed well, then drop a rich biscuit dough on each, spreading out well to cover the top.

Green Corn and Green Pepper.—Cut the corn from four ears, put it into a frying pan with a tablespoonful of hot fat; add a chopped or shredded green

"It is true I can't sing well," said the cat, that had just swallowed the canary, "but I have a good deal of music in me all the same."

Why "Blackballed."

The ancient Greeks used marked shells for voting, and from the Greek word ostrakon comes the English word ostracize, that is, to shut out by an unfavorable shell. "Blackballed" means the same thing, once upon a time white and black balls being used for secret voting.

No Fee.

SHORT-NOTICE DISHES.

The forehanded, careful housekeeper has something on hand which may be put together in a hurry when unexpected company drops in. A plain cake of small drop cakes will make delicious puddings when steamed, and a good sauce is made for them. The sauce for a pudding must be well flavored and smooth.

For such a pudding as the above, take a tablespoonful or two of flour, a cup of sugar, mix well and pour on boiling water to make a smooth paste. Cook until smooth, add two tablespoonfuls of vinegar, a grating of nutmeg and a tablespoonful of butter. Do not omit the butter or the sauce will be flat. This is a delicious sauce to serve with a cottage pudding or any sponge cake.

A white sauce is a dish one may prepare in a hurry, and different materials, such as hard cooked eggs, cold potatoes or any vegetable may be added.

Crackers served with canned apricots poured over them and heated makes a very nice emergency dessert.

An omelet is always good, and as we should be always well supplied with eggs, it makes a good emergency dish. A can or two of prepared soup should be on your emergency shelf, and a nice hot soup can be quickly prepared.

If you have a cup of cold cooked rice, put it with a little butter and a shredded onion, into a frying pan; brown the rice and onion, add three well beaten eggs and a half cup of milk, season well and serve as a hot dish.

A can of salmon or tongue, or if you live on a farm you will no doubt have different kinds of meat which may be quickly prepared. Sausages slightly cooked and put down in jars covered with hot fat will keep well.

Crackers sprinkled with grated cheese and baked, make a good accompaniment to a simple salad. Butter the crackers, spread with the cheese, season with red pepper and salt and put it in the oven.

Bacon is another good meat which keeps, and is so good in a number of dishes.

It is enough the grass to grow for the cattle and herb for the service of man, that he may bring forth food out of the earth.

Cookery means carefulness, inventiveness, watchfulness, willingness and readiness of appliances. —Ruskin.

A VARIETY OF ENTREES.

Entrées, or dishes which come between, include fritters, souffles, patties, rissoles, croquettes and timbales. At any season when chestnuts are in the market the following is a dish worth trying:

Lamb Cutlets With Chestnuts.—Take a pound of chestnuts and make an incision in each; put them into a sauce pan with cold water to cover, bring to the boiling point and boil five minutes. Drain and peel off the shells and inner skin. Put them into a sauce pan with three tablespoonfuls of butter, a few dashes of salt, and sugar, and cook until tender, then put through a sieve. Return the puree to the stew pan, add stock, water or milk, season well. Trim the cutlets evenly, brush with beaten egg and dip in the bread crumbs. Press them well in and shake off all loose ones. Melt two tablespoonfuls of fat in a frying pan, and when smoking hot lay in the cutlets, being careful that they all lie in the same direction. As when cooked the first side is usually the best looking. Fry on both sides and drain well on brown paper, before serving. They will require ten to twelve minutes to cook. Arrange the cutlets in a crown, all bones to the center, with the chestnut puree in the center. Pour a good brown sauce over and serve.

Potato Border.—Take a pint of potatoes, cooked and mashed, two tablespoonfuls of butter, the yolk of an egg and a little milk. Season with salt, and work all together, using care not to get it too soft. Flour a board and turn the potato out on it, roll into a straight, even roll. Make a round piece for the center, lay on the roll, flute with a knife or fork and fill the center with any desired mixture as creamed chicken, peas or celery.

Hanging Stories to Him.

No matter how high a man may climb in the councils of the nation, no matter how worthy, or useful, or dignified he may be, there is nothing that will prevent the irreverent from tying wheezy old stories to him.

Women as a Power.

"If over the time comes when women shall come together simply and purely for the benefit of mankind, it will be a power such as the world has never dreamed of."—Matthew Arnold.

Women in Congress.

The late James Freeman Clarke, answering a man who feared that if women had the ballot they would go to congress, said: "Perhaps so, but not until we want them. And when we want them we shall no longer be shocked at their taking such positions."

BRIDAL ATTIRE COSTLY

Brides all over the world like to make the best display possible on their wedding day, and the bridal attire of the various countries is invariably both costly and beautiful. For sheer gorgeousness, however, says the Wide World Magazine, it would be hard to rival the wedding finery of the brides of the island of Sumatra. The dress is woven entirely of gold thread, and its weight is so great that the wearer can hardly move; even standing up requires a distinct effort. Apart from this shimmering, golden garment, the bride is loaded down with gold ornaments, rings, bangles, earrings, pendants, girdles and necklaces, and sundry ornamental purses of the same metal. The huge ornaments hanging on chains around her neck are hollow, but all the smaller charms are of solid native gold, most massively wrought. One might almost think that the natives, having heard something about a good wife being "worth her weight in gold," had set out to prove the fact by loading their quaint little brides with the actual equivalent of their weight in the precious metal.

Arrested the Ambassador.

Sir Arthur Hardinge, who has been appointed British ambassador at Madrid, can tell of not a few strange experiences that seldom fall to the lot of the diplomat. While on duty in Portugal last year he was arrested by a policeman who believed him to be a conspirator.

It was only after much telephoning, telegraphing and explaining that Sir Arthur was able to prove his identity and then, of course, apologies were profuse.

NEW BUICK CAR FOR DR. S. N. INSLAY

Grayling Friends Present Car as Token of Appreciation of Service to People.

Following the accident that occurred to Dr. S. N. Insley, about two weeks ago, when his arm was broken, while in the act of cranking his car, some of his friends concluded that the community could not afford to have him take any more chances by using his old car, and decided that they would make him a present of a new car.

Without the knowledge of the doctor a subscription paper was taken around and in a very few hours enough money was subscribed to purchase a five passenger car. It is equipped with the Deico system electrical cranks; combination oil and electrical side and tail lamps, and electric head lights.

The car is gray, trimmed in blue black. The motor is four cylinder, four cycle, valve in the head type, and develops fully 28 horse power.

This is a very nice compliment to the doctor and one that he fully merits. The car arrived in the city Monday and the doctor had a ride before he knew anything about the affair, and he concluded that he would sell his old car and get one like it, finally M. Hanson, who is the local agent for the Buick cars, made him a proposition (?) in writing, at the same time handing him this letter which he

Dr. S. N. Insley:

We, the undersigned herewith present to you a model 28 Buick automobile, with the sincere wish that it will carry you quickly, safely and comfortably in response to the call of suffering humanity. It is warranted not to kick, back or run away and will stand without hitching.

We do this not in charity, but in appreciation of your unselfish and splendid service.

We earnestly hope that this car will contribute greatly to your comfort and pleasure.

To the Public:

Who have so generously presented me with a handsome auto, I wish to extend my most sincere thanks and appreciation. I am unable to express in words, my gratitude and feelings at this time—I was taken by surprise and this was entirely unexpected. It is a comfort, indeed, to know that I have such friends—friends who have stood by me during past trials and that I know are with me always. And I trust that during my usefulness on this earth, that I will always be deserving of such friends and merit such loyalty. Most sincerely,

Mrs. Phillip Moshier Passed Away.

Louise Stephan Moshier was born January 30th, 1862, in Rowen, France. She came to this country at the age of 16 years, with her mother, after her father had established residence here.

On August 15th, 1881, she was united in marriage to Phillip Moshier. To this union four children were born—William, Daniel and Mrs. Louise Serven, also Philip who died at the age of three years.

She was taken ill at 9:00 on Wednesday morning and died at 3:15 on the same day, at her home on Chestnut St. near the school house. The funeral service will be held tomorrow (Friday) afternoon from the Methodist Episcopal church. She leaves to mourn her husband and three children, all of this city, and a number of relatives and a large circle of friends.

While Mrs. Moshier had not been in the best of health for some time, due to an eruption of a blood vessel in her head several weeks ago, she has for some time been feeling in excellent health and apparently well as anybody could wish to be and her sudden death was a surprise and shock to this community. She was greatly beloved by all who knew her, and the devotion of her family speaks plainly as to the kind of a wife and mother she was. She was a member of the Macabees and an active member of the Ladies' Aid society of the Methodist church and the Women's Relief Corps.

Mrs. Moshier was an expert at needle work and some of her specimens are proud possessions in many of the homes in this city. She was a woman full of life. She attended church last Sunday and also a supper given by the W. R. C. at their hall on Monday night. On Sunday afternoon she visited her aged father, Peter Moshier, who lives in the country. So well did she feel that she stated that she intended to visit her father every week.

Through her genial personality and lovable nature he had endeared herself to a large number of friends, and her early departure from this life brings sorrow to many and sympathy to those of her family to whom she was so near and dear.

SYNOPSIS.

Professor Desmond of the Pink Observatory causes a great sensation throughout the country by announcing that what appears to be a satellite is approaching the earth. Destruction of the earth is feared. Panic prevails everywhere. The satellite barely misses the earth. The atmospheric disturbance knocks people unconscious, but does no damage.

Selection was made and the seven chosen ones departed in several different directions with assurances that they would hasten back as soon as they had observed conditions abroad in the respective portions of the town to which they had assigned themselves. Blind chance decreed that Alan, Clay and Professor Desmond should remain. Judge Fulton as master of the house remained with them.

They gathered themselves into a close group. "Your theory now, professor?" they asked as their fellows disappeared. Desmond, tall and gaunt, rugged without uncouthness, passed his hand slowly over a forehead lined by long years of study and thought.

"My friends," he began hesitatingly, "we have not only witnessed but are living to tell of a miracle so astonishing that human history contains nothing which even approaches it. You will understand perfectly that any attempted explanation upon my part will be but my individual theory, and that it may be entirely disproved in the light of subsequent developments. That being borne in mind, I think upon your part you will readily concede that while my prophecy as to our destruction went astray, yet our escape was by a hair's breadth of a few score miles. And while I did not calculate with entire accuracy, I did calculate even closer than you could have wished."

"And our being missed—how can that be accounted for if the earth was the object of attack? How can the attracted object miss the magnet and pass on as this body seems to have done?"

"It cannot. And that is the very thing that proves to us that the earth was not the magnet in this case, and it was the error on my part which tends to explain the miss. The body which passed us was undoubtedly at this moment in space many million miles beyond us, perhaps for some vast body or group of bodies of which we have no knowledge, perhaps for one of the huge suns we can see. Or, again, possibly like some of the comets it has an orbit of well nigh incalculable extent, and like a comet passes a certain point every so many years. In any event it took small notice of us—no more in fact than had we been a soap bubble. We merely happened to be in its path."

"But why did not the earth divert this much smaller body to itself when they were in such close contact?"

"That may be accounted for by assuming that because of the entirely different natures of their compositions they did not happen to attract each other, as for example glass ignores the lodestone while iron does not. And because of the terrific speed of the traveler it shot through our sphere of influence by sheer momentum, as a cannon ball may be thrown or shot past a magnet which would divert and retain it had not its momentum carried it by. Some comets which pass very close in their circuit around the sun are only kept from falling into it by their awful momentum, the speed of some of them at that period of their flight being over a million miles an hour. These are the possible solutions which occur to me at this time. However, I am free to admit that my reasoning faculties have been considerably disturbed, and tomorrow I may entirely reverse my opinion of tonight."

"Did it touch us at all?"

"I think not—except atmospherically."

"Why the vibrations, the winds, the terrible air pressure and the vacuum in which we all so nearly perished?"

"More speculation. The earth undoubtedly suffered the approach of the mysterious stranger and evidenced it to the extent of quivers of apprehension. The other physical manifestations were probably electrical, magnetic and etherial, while the pressure and vacuum were caused by actual physical contact."

"But did you not say there was no physical contact?"

"Except the physical contact of their buffeting atmospheres, supposing that the visitor carried its own atmosphere along with it, or the contact of its solid body itself with our atmosphere in case it had none of its own. The result would have been practically the same in either case. Now for the sake of the argument let us assume the earth to be a ball as large as an apple, and our friend of a few moments ago to be a much smaller ball—say the size of a pea. For the purpose of the illustration we will suppose the larger ball which represents the earth to be moving but slowly. Now you throw the smaller ball past the larger one so closely that it just skims it but with a distance the thickness of a piece of paper between them. You will readily understand that for an instant there is considerable air commotion on a small scale in that fraction of a second and fraction of an inch when the balls are so close together—first a rush of wind as the small ball approaches and forces the air ahead of it, next a compression of air at the closest point between them, and third the suction which all rapidly moving bodies create behind them and which is a partial vacuum. This is illustrated by the fact that a common ball may snatch one's breath away without hitting him. So was so with us but upon a much vaster scale. First we had our violent winds, then the compression when the visiting body was hurtling directly over our heads, and lastly the vacuum as it rushed away dragging the air after it. The gale which followed that was caused by the air rushing back to place in the restoration of normal atmospheric equilibrium. As soon as that was restored the wind ceased."

"And the awful roar?"

"It could hardly be expected that the passage of a large body through space at an inconceivable velocity would be attended by absolute silence when it comes in close contact with another body. You know the sound that a bullet makes in passing through the air. Very well. Now that bullet might not make a sound that the human ear could hear in passing through anything as intangible as space, but you must remember that this body of which we speak is hundreds of miles in diameter and that whilst a modern bullet travels with a velocity of only two thousand miles an hour, this small world may well be going two hundred thousand miles an hour—one hundred times as fast. Therefore, no matter how thin the ether of space may be we might well expect sound to accompany an object of that size travelling at that enormous speed."

"You spoke, professor, of the visitor's having an atmosphere. Would it be possible in the event such is the case that it is inhabited by human beings?"

"I would scarcely think so. In the first place its size would hardly seem to justify such a thing, yet were its other conditions favorable its area is sufficient to support a population of several millions, that is judging its conditions to be similar to those upon favored places on this earth. But it may be safely assumed that it does possess a human population—and by human I mean reasoning and speaking creatures, they would in all probability be vastly different from us physically, and therefore in the nature of things, mentally. But as to what these differences might consist of no one can have any conception. He started as though surprised, leaned forward and rubbed his finger across Alan's bosom. A black streak instantly appeared in the wake of the finger. "Were you not dressed in black when you arrived here this evening?" he demanded crisply. "And you, too, doctor—and you!"

They looked at each other in wonderment. From head to foot they were gray, as gray as had ashes been filtered over them through a sieve, while by the glow of the lanterns and brighter electric lights the ground seemed to be carpeted with a sooty snow. In their absorbed listening they had not noticed the phenomenon, but now as they lifted their faces upward they were conscious of the falling of a soft, impalpable substance, fine as flour, sinking as gently as thistle down. Desmond brushed a spoonful of it into his palm, scanned it, rubbed it between his fingers, smelled it, it even tasted it, then shook his head.

"Undoubtedly organic dust brushed from the visitor by atmospheric friction," he muttered. He suddenly bent over with another sharp exclamation of surprise. "Hello! What's this?"

A small twig had come twirling down to his feet and he picked it up and turned it over slowly as it lay crowded around him. "Any of you ever seen anything like this?" he demanded at length as he passed it from hand to hand. Critically they scanned it. The twig was about the length and size of a lead pencil and at its end was a lead black as jet, perfectly round and about the size of a silver dollar. Upon the lead and extending from rim to rim was stamped in glittering white a strange comb-like design. Doria leaning forward for a better view gazed sharply and unabashed at the comest below her throat. Removing it with a quick motion she laid it aside the lead, while from all sides arose exclamations of amazement. For in its color, its design, its all-representative shape that her husband was all vegetable they were identical.

"A most marvelous coincidence," muttered Desmond dreamily. His eyes half closed. "Inconceivable. The globe is shaking itself. That's it. Vegetation descends. What if after all—my God, what's that?"

He turned his face quickly upward, every eye following, every ear alert. From above came first a strange cry unlike any sound they had ever heard before from the throat of man, fowl or beast, quavering yet sharp and insistent, bearing the notes of both a peal and threat as though the thing that uttered it knew not what his next act should be and in his indecision uttered the double note. And while those below were still staring open mouthed and speechless before the oncoming of this new mystery, there came a rush as of mighty wings, a fanning of the air that swept their faces, while from out of the darkness there settled before them a monstrous shape that rooted them in their tracks and caused every hair upon their heads to prick and pull. Manlike of head and limbs, yet manlike in such a way as no mortal eye had ever seen before, with huge bulging eyes, a cavernous mouth hung with loosely flapping lips, thin arms and legs that seemed to be made of cords instead of flesh and muscle and his reddish body loosely hung about by a strange skin, he was more the fantastic apparition of a delirium than any creature known to man since the grotesque flying shapes of prehistoric ages. And more marvelous than all else, attached to his shoulders by huge brachial muscles that ran downward to his hips were a great pair of batlike wings with a spread of full thirty feet, and with these now fully extended he crouched before them in the attitude of a bird just alighting.

Slowly he scanned them, his great eyes glowing luminously in the dusk, his broad mouth working fantastically and his head craned forward as though trying to read in their faces what manner of creatures they were, and whether his next movement should be one of friendship, antagonism or flight. Then his eyes settled upon Doria, who now paralyzed by a terror infinitely greater than had possessed her at the approach of the hostile world, could only stare at the monster like one chained to the spot. Then slowly he raised one long arm until its index finger pointed at the ornament which she held in her hand, and with a strange creaking sound and a curious birdlike hop he came straight towards her.

CHAPTER IV.

The Battle on the Lawn.

The deathlike hush that had fallen upon them was pierced by a scream so sharp and terror filled that it stabbed the night air like a vocal dagger, such a scream as a woman might utter in finding herself in the clutches of a fiend. Yet it was not Doria who uttered it, but some woman who stood close beside her. Shriill and piercing, it cut to their very marrow, yet so uncanny had been the night and so brief the interval between the hurdling passage of the monster of the skies that had so nearly snuffed out their lives and the appearance of this grotesque thing from another world, that their overstrung nerves were still all quivering and beneath the woman's wild cry they swerved and leaped backward as a horse swerves and backs beneath a slashing whip cut, wild eyed and quivering. In a solid bunch they huddled against the front of the Fulton home, the men thrusting the women behind them as they turned, unarmed but desperate to combat the beast they could this monstrous flying thing that had been brushed from a world gone forever into space, and who now cast among them in all likelihood possessed of Satanic malice as well as of superhuman means of transporting himself. March caught in the press and for a moment rendered helpless, forced his way to the front rank just in time to see that Doria, still rooted to the spot, stood alone before the advancing one. With an inarticulate cry he launched himself forward and thrust aside the clawlike hand that was descending upon her.

"Get out," he cried, as though he were speaking to one who spoke his language. "Clear out!"

The hand remained poised in the air and from the distance of a yard March gazed into the face of the newcomer. And in that instant of suspense and tension the features of the Flying Man became photographed upon his memory as upon a sensitized plate. His forehead was broad and of good height, indicating a brain equivalent in volume at least to an ordinary man's. His huge eyes were filmy but luminous within, his nose beaklike, his mouth enormous and studded with magnificent, even teeth save for the long canines. His ears were those of an average human being, his head covered by thinly scattered and exceedingly coarse brown hair. Taken all in all it was the face of a human being of a species different from any of this world, yet of one who as Desmond had defined it was "a reasoning, speaking creature," and who possessed tremendous possibilities for destructiveness and yet who was not wholly depraved or vicious. And now as he faced him in determined opposition to his desire to reach the girl, and yet opposing him without gesture of threat or violence, March fancied he saw the first fierce glint that had greeted his opposition fade into a look of half appeal. With a final command of his hand for the intruder to remain where he was, Alan began hustling Doria towards the steps leading into the house. But scarcely had he gone a yard when the winged one was again clutching at her over her protector's shoulder, not angrily as it appeared, but more as an impatient child hops reaching for a coveted bauble, or a man grasps for some elusive object which he greatly desires to possess. Steadily March warded off the attacks with patient determination to frustrate them at all cost but with no attempt at retaliation, while as steadily the other pursued with no attempt to injure either of his quarry. It was thrust and parry, thrust and parry like a pair of fencers, and with the lower rise of the porch beneath his feet and but a dozen more steps between them and safety behind the stout doors, Alan's hope arose and he whispered a word of encouragement to the automatically moving girl. And then at the very threshold of peace escape the armistice was suddenly shattered.

From out of the front row where he had stood with the other men staring at the strange spectacle before them, Tolliver now stepped with a revolver gleaming in his hand. He threw it up, aimed quickly and fired, and at the crash of the weapon the Flying Man reeled with a pathetic, animal like cry and a convulsive clutching at his side. Again the weapon spoke and again the creature quivered and screamed, while Alan saw leap into his eyes in place of the mild luminosity that had abated there a glare so ghastly that it froze his blood as though the other had suddenly been transformed into a man eating tiger. One glance showed him that his pursuer's gaze was now fixed upon Doria but upon Tolliver, and taking advantage of the opportunity he hustled her up the steps with a rush and thrust her behind the stout door. From without there burst forth a wild melody, of shrieks, yells, deep bellowed croaks and the sound of heavy blows, and releasing the girl he went flying down the steps to the aid of his companions.

Tolliver was lying upon his back, white and motionless, the Flying Man, his face now hideously distorted, leaping about and over the prostrate one as with amazing strength and agility he alternately attacked and defended himself from the rushes of the five men who assailed him from every side with a cyclone of kicks and blows. His wings now closely folded somewhat like a fan protected not over a yard on either side of him, but with them he struck lightning blows as an eagle strikes when battling close in with its enemy. "Doctor Raymond, a heavy and powerful man, launching himself fairly upon the other threw an arm about his neck with the purpose to pull him down, only the next second to be hurled bodily into space by his enemy whose limbs though thin seemed to possess the iron tendons and strength of the forelegs of a horse. Professor Desmond attempting to rush in received a blow across the forehead from a joint wing that cut it open as by a spade, and fell unconscious upon his back with a broad scar gaping wide, the mark of which is plainly to be seen upon his brow today. March arriving with a rush at this moment saw an opportunity to launch himself boldly upon the other's back and did so, encircling the throat with one arm and belaboring his foe as best he could with his powerful fist. But each time his knuckles landed they seemed to be falling upon a stone wall.

Judge Fulton, Edwards and King still remained upon their feet. Of these the first named was corpulent, short of wind and incapable of doing more than running about and feinting in order to divert his foe's attention, but this he was doing to the best of his ability. Edwards, strong and active, was seeking an opportunity to close in, his pocket knife held open in his hand; while King, who had evidently been partially stunned by a blow, was stumbling about the lawn as though in search of some weapon, a stone or a club. In his position upon the other's back and between the wings March had a tremendous advantage, yet despite his strength and immunity from attack found that he could do little more than hamper the creature's movements. Edwards seeing the foe thus encountered rushed headlong in with his knife ready for a sweeping thrust, and March, keenly alive to the opportunity, threw all his strength into a backward surge in an attempt to overbalance the one he held in order that the blade might find its mark. But the one beneath him reared and leaped aside as a horse might beneath its rider, and the next instant March found himself arising half stunned from the grass several yards distant. Edwards lay inert where he had been felled by a tremendous blow or kick delivered with such lightning quickness that none but the one who delivered it ever knew from where it came. As for the Flying Man, he now stood crouching in the center of the battlefield with his wings half spread and his huge eyes glowing like those of an enormous beetle. He was moaning and the blood was running profusely from his side where Tolliver's bullet had raked him across the ribs.

Some of the women had fled beneath the trees or gone screaming down the street in search of assistance, but others still remained huddled against the steps in wild-eyed horror and incapacity of movement. With a hop that carried at least ten feet the creature was close before them, scanning them, peering into their faces and seeming to be bewildered as they collapsed before him without having been struck a blow. Then turning about he saw Tolliver, whom he appeared to have momentarily forgotten, as the latter was attempting to rise, and with a malevolent scream leaped upon him. That he purposed some terrible act against this man who had been the first to assail and wound him, none who saw his face and attitude ever questioned. But Alan getting upon his feet at that instant and stumbling forward empty handed with the desperate resolve to do his utmost to defend his rival, felt his foot fall upon a hard object. Stooping he grasped Clay's revolver. He cocked it as he straightened himself up.

Warned by the sharp click of the upraised hammer, the Flying Man leaped off his victim and from his lips burst a wild scream that unmistakably denoted that he had learned to fear this fire spitting thing which had stung him so keenly. With a leap aside of inconceivable quickness he landed upon the steps of the porch, the blood now streaming down his leg and leaving its dark mark wherever he stepped. Alan sighted quickly and pulled the trigger. The hammer fell with a metallic click upon an imperfect cartridge and no explosion followed. Once more he cocked it, but as he tilted his arm his antagonist leaped like a great frog into the air, the huge wings flew out as released springs uncoil, beat downward with a power so tremendous that the blast from them swept the watchers as a gale, beat again and upward between the trees the body of the Flying Man shot into the murky like a mammoth prehistoric bat, disappearing in a flash. But a moment later his scream came back to them, malicious and exultant.

Alan threw his useless firearm down with an imprecation upon its futility. And as he did so there burst through the door and came darting down the steps a figure with hair flying and eyes ablaze, bearing in her hand a naked, rusty cutlass which she thrust into March's hand as her eyes flew about. "Where is he? Oh, where is he?" she gasped. Alan pointed upward.

"Gone—slipped away like a chicken hawk," he burst forth angrily, his desire for battle fully aroused and his disappointment acute that the invader had escaped. The girl's face darkened. Doria was of good old fighting stock as well as herself. Had not her great grandfather been a minute man? And had not her grandmother shot an Indian with her own hand when the savages attacked their prairie school-er way back in the '50s? And now Doria herself, warm hearted and impulsive, was feeling for the first time in her life the fierce warlike strain of blood of her forbears coursing through her veins. Her small hands tightened.

"As soon as you left me I regained possession of myself, and when I heard the shouts and blows I looked out of the door. You were all fighting and striking and running and jumping and I wanted to help but did not know what to do. I know I would only be in the way unless I had a weapon, so I went raging through the house trying to remember if we had any such things. Finally I thought of this old sword which my uncle—he was in the Spanish-American war you know—brought back from one of the sunken battleships. Well, it was hanging over the fireplace in the room he used to have when he lived with us, and I got on a chair and finally managed to get it down and came running out here. But of course I was too late. If I could only have got one stroke at him—"

Her fierceness vanished in a flash at sight of the white face of the women who had so recently gazed into the eyes of the departed one from the distance of a foot, and she went scurrying up to the place where they had immediately fled after the fight. Then after a moment she came down again as rapidly as she had ascended and ran to her father, who was supporting Desmond. King had returned from his fruitless search for a weapon, Dr. Raymond had regained his feet and no one appeared to have been injured seriously. "Where is Clay?" she demanded.

None knew. He had been seen to arise a moment before but in the rapid happening of events that followed all had lost sight of him. "Doria" brow clouded. "Run away! I don't believe a word of it. He is not that kind," she announced in reply to an insinuation. "I hope the poor fellow is not seriously hurt. Suppose we look about the place for him, for he cannot have gone far in so short a time." She started off by the side of March.

"Do you think Clay used good judgment in shooting the creature when he was not attempting to harm us? Perhaps he was merely bewildered or trying in his way to be friendly," she said. March became emphatic.

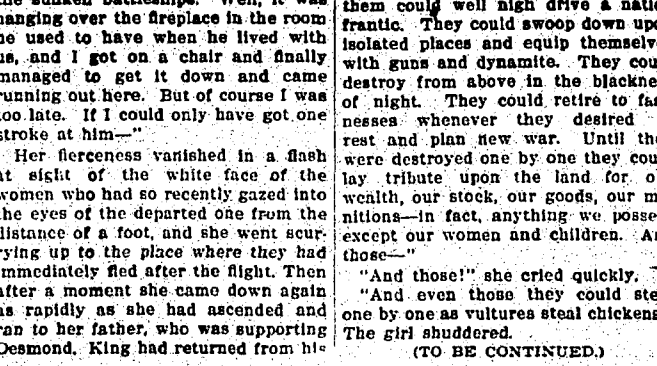

"Indeed I do not. He was altogether too impulsive and raised the dickens by it. But of course we were all highly wrought up, and the appearance of the creature was not conducive to the quieting of one's nerves. Yet I am convinced that he intended us no harm until he was wounded. But it was plain enough to be seen that either you personally or that ornament you wear appealed to him strangely. Its resemblance to the leaf is wonderful and perhaps excited him somewhat. He appeared to wish to detain you and try and communicate with you more than to do any injury as well as I could judge by his movements and the expression in his eyes. Had Clay restrained himself we might have been able to establish some sort of an understanding with him which would eventually have led to our being able to communicate intelligently with each other. For I am convinced that he is some sort of a human being who speaks some sort of a language. And try and imagine what a leap that would be for human knowledge! Actual mouth-to-mouth communication with a being from another celestial body. Heaven only knows what might have come of it if he could tell us of his travels on that flying home of his. But as it is, I am afraid we have unleashed a fiend upon ourselves—a creature who with his wonderful gift of flight and imbued with the belief that our only desire is to do him harm can if he so desires wreak a terrible vengeance upon us. And that he now considers himself an outlaw with a price upon his head I have small doubt, and being afraid to again trust himself amongst us and with no possibility on his part of escape from this world, there is no telling what crime or series of crimes he may attempt."

"And suppose there should be more than one of them, a dozen, a hundred, a thousand!" she exclaimed in an awed voice. The man's face grew very serious.

"Then so much the worse for the world. For if they possess the intelligence and potential vindictiveness which I am afraid they do, a score of them could well drive a nation frantic. They could sweep down upon isolated places and equip themselves with guns and dynamite. They could destroy from above in the blackness of night. They could retire to fastnesses whenever they desired to rest and plan new war. Until they were destroyed one by one they could lay tribute upon the land for our wealth, our stock, our goods, our munitions—in fact, anything we possess except our women and children. And those—"

"And those!" she cried quickly. "And even those they could steal one by one as vultures steal chickens." The girl shuddered.

Patriotic Men of Stettin

Example of German Thoroughness is Shown in Way the City is Systematically Bombed.

In the city of Stettin, Germany, is a unique society for the promotion of the export trade. It was founded in 1872, and weekly lectures are given, dealing with subjects of interest to its members. A striking feature is the granting of stipends to capable young men who desire to go abroad for training in foreign countries. An applicant for a stipend must have some knowledge of the English language and of the commercial language of the country to which he intends to go. He must also submit testimonials as to character and ability. The stipend is to be large enough to cover the expenses of the journey and to tide over a reasonable period of time until employment can be found. The maximum sum granted is $360. Should the recipient later find himself in a position to repay the stipend to the association, he is expected to do so. He must give his word of honor that he will justify the confidence placed in him by making the best use of his sojourn abroad in increasing his knowledge and employing it in the promotion of Stettin's trade. He is also obliged to make quarterly reports to the association, in which he relates his experiences abroad, describes trade conditions, gives details as to production and consumption, climate, exports and imports, and especially how Stettin's trade with the country can be promoted.

It Reminded Him of Something. "I fear the beautiful institution of friendship is slowly decaying," commented Mrs. Knox, with a hopeless shake of her expressive head. "Alan, one's coterie of true friends is very small, these days. I, for one, long ago laid aside the sugar-tongs with which to handle mine—I give sincerity and I demand sincerity in return."

Oliver Knox looked up from his magazine with a dubious smile. "You just think you do, Amy—but don't believe everything that comes into that little head of yours. The trouble with you idealistic women is that you expect your friends to pretend to understand yourselves. Oh, uh, by the way, I just thought of something—I never fixed that door in the basement you told me about last week. I think I'll go and do it this minute."

ECZEMA ON BACK AND CHEST

Pierson, N. Dakota.—"The eczema started on my scalp. It finally went on to the back of my neck, then on to my back, arms and chest. It broke out in pimples first and then seemed to run together in some places, making a sore about the size of a dime. At times the itching and burning were so intense that it seemed unbearable. The more I scratched at it the worse it became, and there would be a slight discharge from it, especially on my scalp, so as to make my hair matted and sticky close to the scalp. The hair was dry, lifeless and thin. My hair was falling so terribly that I had begun to despair of ever finding relief. My clothing irritated the eruption on my back. The affected parts were almost a solid scab. "I had been bothered with eczema for about a year and a half. Then I began using the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used them daily for two months and I was cured." (Signed) Miss Mildred Dennis, Apr. 30, 1913.

MELISSA RECOGNIZES INSUPERABLE BARRIER.

Mrs. Merriwold's maternal maiden Aunt Jane wore her real rose coral necklace, a pink waist and a mysterious smile, the latter adornment being assumed when Mrs. Merriwold expressed her admiration of the general effect.

"The rate at which you're improving makes my head swim," declared Mrs. Merriwold. "You'll be tottering around in a hobble the next thing I know."

"I don't think that you need feel any anxiety on that score, my dear," said Aunt Jane. "I have always been brought up to consider the petticoat an indispensable adjunct of feminine attire, and bloomers as an infringement on that appertaining to the other sex."

"Dear me!" remarked Mrs. Merriwold. "Mr. Chubb will be here this afternoon, Melissa," observed Aunt Jane in a casual manner, as she shifted her embroidery hoops.

Mrs. Merriwold opened her eyes wide and became alarmingly rigid. "Here—this—afternoon!" she exclaimed. "Why, I told him distinctly that I was going to the matinee. I told you that I had reasons for staying at home, dearie. Surely you remember. When did he tell you he was coming?"

Aunt Jane's face approximated the color of the coral necklace. "He telephoned about an hour ago," she repeated. "It isn't only that I ache to push him over with my finger to see if he won't roll right side up again; it's not merely the fact that he wears those double thick convex spectacles that give him a somewhat pop-eyed effect of looking into my strictly private soul, and I could overlook his regular habits and his side whiskers; poor dear Henry Merriwold had both side whiskers and regular habits. What keeps me from bidding my blushing face in his shirt bosom and murmuring a bashful consent is his delusion that he has a rather nifty tenor voice."

Aunt Jane looked at her niece queerly. "There's something else, isn't there, my dear?" she asked.

"I haven't given the matter a great deal of thought," replied Mrs. Merriwold absently. "There might be, of course."

"It occurs to me, my love, that his not asking you might be a consideration," suggested Aunt Jane, in a shifty voice. "You might find the further fact that he has no idea of asking you something in the nature of an insuperable bar. You see, Melissa, dear, it is highly probable that you have misconstrued the purpose of Mr. Chubb's rather frequent visits here, and that, however attractive you may be to some gentlemen, there are other gentlemen who—who—who—"

Aunt Jane snatched the little lace handkerchief from her belt, pressed it to her eyes and started for the door, her shoulders shaking with emotion.

plied. "I didn't want to disturb you about it so I said you would be very glad to see him. I thought you liked him, Melissa."

"I'm crazy about him," said Mrs. Merriwold, dryly. "I think he's the sweetest thing that ever brushed three strands of hair across a bald spot; still, I'm afraid he'll be disappointed if he expects to see me this afternoon. As for the impenetrable recesses of the tangled woods, I'll let you console him for my absence, dearie, and you can blame yourself."

Aunt Jane's eyes lost their usually mild expression and she jabbed her needle into her work with some viciousness. "Thank you, my dear," she said. "At the same time I don't regard the society of a well-informed and gentlemanly man as an affliction, however you may feel about it, and I may add, my love, that it seems to me unkindly to make personal remarks. Even if Mr. Chubb were bald—which he is not—it would be no reflection on him."

"I didn't say it was shiny enough to reflect," said Mrs. Merriwold.

"And intellectual men nearly always have a tendency to baldness," pursued Aunt Jane. "There was Julius Caesar, and—Mr. Rockefeller."

"They're generally smooth people—on top," admitted Mrs. Merriwold. "You talk nonsense," snapped Aunt Jane. "If being bald is a crime it's strange that they have to keep barbers in prisons to cut the convicts' hair. You ought to get a Skye terrier if you're so fond of things that look like door-mats. I suppose that's what you find so attractive in Mr. Victor."

"I wonder if that is it," said Mrs. Merriwold, dreamily, "or whether it's because Mr. Victor hasn't dimpled cheeks? Honest, Auntie, dear, don't you think dimpled knees on a male person over seven have a tendency to destroy the spirit of romance?"

"Melissa," said Aunt Jane with spirit, "if you talk like that I shall leave the room."

"Please excuse me, dearie," begged Mrs. Merriwold. "I wouldn't say anything to embarrass you for worlds, intentionally. But you know, Auntie, that nobody loves a fat man."

"He's not fat," said Aunt Jane. "He isn't a dissipated person, I should imagine, and consequently he hasn't been reduced to skin and bones like some gentlemen I could name. He may be inclined to portliness, but that only proves that he has a good appetite and sleeps well. I like to see a man comfortably stout."

"You've got a treat in store for this afternoon, then," remarked Mrs. Merriwold.

"About people have their feelings," said Aunt Jane.

"Still, I'm afraid that I can never learn to love him," Mrs. Merriwold but before her hand could touch the knob her niece had her in an embrace from which there was no escape.

"Auntie!" cried Mrs. Merriwold. "Look at me! You don't mean to tell me that—Oh, you dear thing!" Auntie, if I had had the faintest idea in the world that you knew I didn't mean anything by what I said, and I think he's a darling and as sweet and lovable as he can be. Dearie, please! Here, I'm going to shake you. Tell me, has he actually proposed?"

Aunt Jane giggled a little hysterically. "He—he has intimated—that he will this afternoon," she stammered.

"Heaven forgive you, you've broken my heart!" Mrs. Merriwold laughed delightedly. "You perfidious things! Here I've been thinking all along that I had a chance, and now—Oh, Auntie, Auntie! Now you can run along and bathe your eyes and pretty up and I'll be out of the house inside of ten minutes."

"You—you're sure you don't mind, Melissa?" said Aunt Jane, anxiously.

Mrs. Merriwold kissed her fervently and reassuringly, and then, taking her by the shoulders, turned her out of the room and apostrophized the electric trolley.

"Well, wouldn't that agitate you?" she said.

$1,000,000 for Emperor's Jubilee.
It is a very ill wind that blows nobody any good, and the Kaiser's jubilee year will bring many blessings in its train. His majesty has declined all gifts for his own person, but has declared he will gratefully acknowledge anything in the cause of charity.

German's old soldiers will, happily, reap special benefit, the city of Leipzig alone giving $125,000, and Chemnitz, Nuremberg, Augsburg and other towns sums of $25,000 and upward for that good cause, while the Province of Posen is building a veterans' home. Berlin gives the ground and upkeep of a home for invalided artisans, and Charlottenburg's donation of $75,000 will be divided between the veterans and a consumption hospital. Free libraries and hospitals are being liberally subscribed for in many parts, and children of the working classes will have a good deal done for them.

The sum to be expended has reached $1,000,000 already—and does not include many private endowments—in honor of the emperor's jubilee year.

Very Useful.

Figured Satin Makes Rich Coat

GRACEFUL, enveloping coats of figured and brocaded fabrics, especially those of satin, are luxurious beyond all other garments except those of rich fur. In these figured satin coats the design breaks up and enhances the sheen of surfaces. Their high luster forms a playmate for color and light and the three dances together upon them.

If one is looking for the luxurious, it is to be found in these garments. In the new, and what are termed "fancy," colors these coats are only suited to high occasions. Oftener they are developed in gray, or taupe, or in some rich brown shade and are more generally useful. Perhaps gray is the happiest choice of color for them; it is at home everywhere and it is very elegant and—by comparison—quiet. The figured satin coat does not pose as quiet, however—it is a showy garment.

Linings are in contrasting colors, but they must be chosen carefully. Nothing conspicuous will do for them. For trimming, fur and marabout come into use. Both these, this season, are dyed into all sorts of colors. They are, after all, best in natural colors and in black and white.

Brown fox, martin, skunk and stich are among the most fashionable furs and favorites as a finish on satin coats. Marabout, next to fur (in the natural color), looks well on them.

The coat of figured satin looks luxurious and comfortable and when made right, its performance is up to its appearance. It is expensive, but it excites this characteristic by unusual beauty.

Similar coats of figured crepe cost less, but cannot be classed as inexpensive. Mottelasse makes a beautiful coat much like its prototype in satin.

In spite of the vogue for shorter coats than those worn last winter, there are plenty of examples of long coats in satin and in fur. Robert, of Paris, shows a model in sealskin trimmed with martin, much longer than the coat pictured here. Max shows one in mole skin trimmed with pure ermine considerably shorter. So the matter of length need not deter one from choosing a coat longer than these popularly worn and by this means achieving long, graceful lines and the utmost of the suggestion of comfort and elegance.

PRETTY TURBAN SUITABLE FOR YOUTHFUL FACE

DESIGNED for the daughter in mourning, or for other youthful faces, this simple turban is a splendid example of fitness in millinery.

Mourning silk—that is, silk in a special weave having a rich but dull surface—makes the band about the head. It is laid in a triple fold over a support of buckramette. The bare crown is not so easy to manage as one might imagine. First a supporting crown of crinoline is shaped and sewed to the brim support. Over this a thin silk is placed, cut and shaped to follow the crinoline, exactly.

On the foundation band of buckramette a covering of thin silk is first placed. Over this at its upper edge a bias fold of crinoline is stretched. At the under edge a similar fold of silk is placed and over this the triple fold of mourning silk.

The smart crown of crinoline has finally to be placed. It is a little higher than the supporting crown of crinoline and is intended about the outer edge. The crinoline must be tacked to the foundation.

lating with invisible stitches, as otherwise it will not stay in place. The crown is made of a circular piece of with the raw edge turned under and blind-stitched into a narrow hem.

The extra fulness of crinoline is laid in irregular folds at any place on the band where it becomes necessary to dispose of it. This depends upon the shape of the crown. It will be seen that the crinoline is almost plain across the front, but has considerable fulness at the right side and apparently less at the left.

The crinoline lies almost plain across the back of the shape also. The hemmed edge is tacked to the upper edge of the band with its fulness disposed of in this way and this finishes the hat except for the small hat bow.

made of the silk and sewed to the band at the right side.

The home milliner who knows how to sew neatly may undertake this hat. It is one of the few crinoline hats which can be trusted to other than professional makers. Mourning millinery is considered difficult to make even by professionals. But specialists who have been trained in the possibilities of crinoline achieve marvelous results with it.

Proper Care of the Piano.
A small bag of unlacquered lime hung inside of the piano will catch dampness and prevent rust of the wires. In winter, when the fires are going and the atmosphere becomes too dry, it is well to keep a plant in the room with a piano, but the plant will require more frequent watering. Wipe the keys daily with a cloth moistened in alcohol. If a small linen bag filled with camphor is hung on a small nail on the inside of the piano case it will prevent moths from getting into the felt.

TAKE 'CURE' AT HOME

Americans Need Not Go Abroad for Health.

New Yorker Tells His Experience—Relates How He Reached Up From Heat and Overwork by Hot and Cold Water Treatments.

New York.—In the blistering summer weather, when tens of thousands of overworked and nerve-wrecked Americans are swarming to the watering places and cure houses of Europe, it is worth while to consider the results which one can get by common sense methods at home, James Creelman writes.

Hydrotherapy! To the average man or woman, it is a hard, big word, big with mystery.

Yet, in a general way, it means nothing more than the scientific and systematic use of hot and cold water to tone up and restore the nervous system.

Right in your own bathroom you may do for yourself nearly anything that can be done for you in the greatest hydrotherapeutic establishments of Germany or France.

A little more than a year ago I was an almost complete nervous wreck. Overwork had reduced me to a condition of exhaustion, and I tumbled to the floor beside my desk in the municipal civil service commission.

And it had been ascertained by my doctor that my heart was sound—a condition necessary to the treatment—I was put into a bathtub of very hot water.

This steaming process was principally to prepare me for the ultimately agreeable shock that was to follow.

After I had perished in the hot water until my whole body was red I was allowed to sit up in the tub and ice water was steadily poured over me for a long time and my spine was rubbed with ice.

Then I learned what I had not understood before, that, with the body perfectly prepared by heat, ice does for the nerves what dumbbells do for the muscles.

It is impossible to put into words the sense of returning strength, calmness and courage that came with the icy effusions that drenched my tired and tortured frame.

Hope succeeded despair. Vigor took the place of helplessness. I was filled with the sense of physical exhilaration which one sometimes feels after a good swim in the sea.

Day after day, week after week, I was subjected alternately to hot water and ice water. My strength returned. I slept soundly. My appetite grew keen. A singular tranquillity took possession of my irritated nerves. I felt young and worked with an ease and enthusiasm I had not known for a long time.

We go to the expense of trouble of a voyage to Germany in search of health when we can achieve the same results by observing the same diet and taking the same exercise at our own homes. We waste time and money in going to Aix-les-Bains when we have precisely the same means of restoring our nervous systems in our own bathtubs.

WANT BEEF, NOT BEAR MEAT

California Man Offers Flesh to the Public With Very Indifferent Success.

Sacramento.—Near Donner station, in the Sierras, bears are making their appearance in numbers. Hungry after their winter's hibernation, they are coming out in the open in search of food, only to fall victims to the guns of hunters.

A. W. Lorraine, a resident of that section, killed last week and shipped to this city a 150-pound bear to sell in the local markets, with the statement that if there was any demand for this kind of meat he would not doubt be able to make frequent shipments, as the bears seemed to be very plentiful this year.

Despite the fact that the animal had been an occupant of its winter's den for several months, its flesh was in fairly good condition, but the general public did not seem to take kindly to it, and there is little likelihood that bear meat will become a part of the usual diet of northern California.

$5,500 BOWNS FOR SQUAWS

Many Indian Girls of the West Wear Exceedingly Expensive Dresses.

Spokane, Wash.—About the most expensive dresses in the Pacific Northwest are worn on state occasions by Julia and Rose Webb, two Nez Percé Indian girls living on the reservation near Lewiston, Idaho. Each dress is worth $5,500, not for the material, but for the 350 elk teeth used in the decorations, the teeth being worth $10 apiece. The teeth were collected by ancestors of the Webb girls when elk were more plentiful than now.

Grocer in Row With Dentist.

Kearney, N. J.—Joseph Pecker, a grocer, appeared in court here and charged Dr. J. B. Stevenson with attempting to gouge out a new set of false teeth because he had refused to settle with the dentist for inserting the set. Pecker refused to pay, he said, because the dentist would not return the old set, removed to make room for the new teeth.

CAPABLE OF GREAT VARIETY

Tomato Salad May Be Served in Innumerable Forms—Ways of Removing the Skins.

A tomato salad is capable of as many variations as the fillings for stuffed tomatoes, but in whatever way prepared, do not inflect the skins upon the consumer. To remove the skins deftly, try either one of these two ways: Plunge for a second into boiling water, then skim and chill, or remove the stem and rub the back of a knife against the fruit, pressing gently with the dull edge from the stem and downward until all the surface has been covered. After a little experience this is almost as easily done as when scalded and the skin comes off as readily. For a breakfast salad, chill the tomatoes, cut into quarters, cover with a French dressing made by mixing vinegar with an even teaspoonful of salt and a liberal sprinkling of pepper, and serve directly from the ice so that it has not time to wilt. Tomatoes either sliced thin or quartered are excellent sprinkled with sweet peppers cut with the scissors into water-thin ribbons; with a sprinkling of chopped parsley, or chives or equal amounts chopped chives, tarragon and chervil. Spanish onions cut water thin are also delicious with tomatoes, whether served alone or on crisp lettuce leaves. Fine cut celery is another satisfactory combination to use with tomatoes.

IMPORTANCE OF TABLE LINEN

Well to Bestow Some Thought on Appearances Before They Are Purchased and Shaped.

In buying a table cloth one should, if possible, have the exact measurement of the table for which it is intended; the usual length is from two and one-half to three yards. If the table is a square one, one-fourth to one-third of a yard is allowed to fall over the ends. Many of the new cloths have the design round on a square cloth, which makes them especially attractive for the round table, as the cloth can be cut circular without disturbing the pattern; usually these have a circle of flowers, or the satin bands, according to the design in the border, in the middle of the cloth to fit the top of the table. Napkins should match the cloths, and there ought to be two dozen allowed for each cloth; one dozen of each size.

Salads a la Printanier.

You may make a variety of most entrancing, though simple and inexpensive spring salads for luncheon and dinner by preparing the vegetables in the same manner as for soup, dicing, shredding, slicing, cutting in cubes, oblong shapes, etc., cooking each separately in salted water, and draining carefully. In the luncheon salad rice and meat, crab, lobster, shrimp and even nut meats may be used. Indeed, one has such an abundance of riches at their command, more is the pity we do not know how to make the best use of them, and there is no galsaying the fact that to too many women of today the preparation of food is a bore; the thought of providing three meals a day a nightmare.

By sentencing a tango dancer to six months in prison Germany shows its intention to take the tang out of tango.

A Kansas banker is accused of "swiping" cigars in retail stores. It is likely that he also saved the bands.

SACRIFICES NOT REQUIRED BY GOD

Sacrifices Under Jewish Law and Their Antitypes.

Pastor Russell's Preaching—Why Not "Fashionable"—Why It Is Doctrinal. Eating God's Word—Unrequited and Undesirable Sacrifices—Acceptable Sacrifices—The Rewards of Accepted Sacrifices—The "Better Sacrifices."

Washington, D. C., Oct. 10.—We report one of Pastor Russell's discourses for today from the text, "Sacrifices and offering of burnt offerings and offering for sin Thou wouldst not, neither haddest pleasure therein; which are offered by the Law."

Hebrews 10:8.

Before discussing his text, the Pastor answered the queries of those who ask why he does not preach "fashionable" sermons—digests of leading magazine articles, dissertations on scientific progress, public parks, better housing for the poor, discourses on temperance, the social evil, etc. His reply is that he has a different ordination, which reads, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because He hath anointed me to preach good tidings to the meek."

The Master and the Apostles set the standard which he believes should be followed. He follows their example, not considering himself wise enough to improve upon their methods. Jesus' preaching was along the simplest doctrinal lines, because none of His hearers were begotten of the Holy Spirit. The Divine thought is expressed that beginners in the Christian way should desire the sincere milk of the Word, "whereas advanced Christians should feed upon strong meat. Nothing else can satisfy souls hungering and thirsting after righteousness."

Unrequited and Undesirable Sacrifices.

The Pastor then discussed his text. St. Paul is quoting from the fortieth Psalm. Through the Prophet David, God declared that the sacrifices of the Law, which could never really cancel sin, were not to His pleasure. Christ is here represented as noting that the typical sacrifices could not move sin, but that His own body had been especially prepared as a Sin-offering, to provide the better sacrifice necessary to redeem Adam and his race.

Further, we read of the Master's consecration at thirty years of age. Everything written in the Law and in the Prophets respecting the bearing of the penalty of Adam's sin by a Savior, Jesus pledged Himself to carry out. "Then said I, Lo, I come to do Thy will, O God."

The Pastor then showed that St. Paul points out that the unacceptable sacrifices were those of the Law; and that when Jesus offered Himself as the antitypical sacrifice, it meant the taking away of the first, or typical, to put into their place the antitypical.

"Better Sacrifices"—Plural.

Pastor Russell reminded his hearers that the Atonement Day sacrifices were plural, and that the Apostle speaks of "better sacrifices than these." This same lesson he declared to be set forth elsewhere in Scripture; namely, that from the beginning it had been the Divine purpose, that our Lord should have associates, who would pass through similar experiences. The Pastor cited many Scriptural proofs of this assertion. Christ is styled "the Captain of our salvation," "the Bridegroom," the "High Priest of our profession," etc. The Church are the under-priests, now sacrificing, preparing as He did, for the glorious future work. These priests St. Peter styles a Royal Priesthood, because they will have kingly power combined with priestly service.

Holy and Acceptable Sacrifices.

Pastor Russell next explained why Israel's Atonement Day sacrifices were merely types. The Law read, "A man's life for a man's life." Hence a bullock and a goat could never be acceptable to God as a substitutionary sacrifice for Adam and his family.

Then the Pastor demonstrated that God prepared Jesus with an acceptable body; and our Lord "offered up Himself" an acceptable sacrifice. Divine acceptance was manifested:

(1) At Jesus' consecration, by the imputation of the Holy Spirit;

(2) By Jesus' resurrection, born of the Spirit to glory and immortality.

As in the Atonement Day sacrifice there was an offering of a bullock, representing Jesus' death, so there was a subsequent offering of a goat, typifying the Church's sacrifice.

Jesus' sacrifice continued during the three and a half years of His ministry, and ended with His death. Forty days after, He ascended on Illich. Then He made application of the merit of His sacrifice on behalf of all who desire to become His footstep followers.

Those in the upper room at Pentecost were the first to be begotten of the Holy Spirit, and to become acceptable sacrifices. Since then, others have been received from every nation. Soon the foreordained number of such sacrifices, or priests, will have completed the Body of Christ beyond the veil. Forthwith the Messianic Kingdom will be established for the blessing of all.

TALKS ON DECAY OF MANNERS

Lord Rosebery Addresses Boys of the Royal Grammar School at Guildford.

London.—"The Decay of Manners" was the subject of an address by Lord Rosebery to the boys of the Royal Grammar school at Guildford.

Lord Rosebery, who presented prizes to the boys, referred to a school statute framed 300 years ago, that "Courtesy and good manners are to be established by all good means," and proceeded:

"The men of the seventeenth century, I suspect, the gentlest-bred Englishmen ever produced, partly because they possessed good manners themselves, and partly because they realized the enormous importance of courtesy and manners in the common transactions of life."

"Now, we English people, and I am afraid, still more we Scotch people, are never famous for good manners. I think at one time there was a sort of John Bull feeling in England that good manners were a device for the dancing, frog-eating Frenchman, whom it was our duty to despise."

"I think there has been a decay of manners in England, Scotland and all of the world. Good appearance and good manners have an enormous commercial value in life. I sometimes wonder why they are not harped on more than on these occasions. Good appearance, you may say, is not at our command. Good looks are not at our command; they are a gift of the gods, but a good, straightforward, manly appearance, an appearance without self-consciousness—which is the most disagreeable feature perhaps of all in appearance—is within the command of everybody."

It is said that the Princess Patricia of Connaught wrote a book of her impressions over here which has been suppressed by high authority. This is a pity. We can stand with equality anything a pretty girl chooses to say about us, especially if the writing is of the usual caliber of royal authorship.

The certainty of a new age development is manifested in two recent examples, that of an actress in New York who refused to give out details of her divorce action, and that of a man who is going to try to fly across the Atlantic, but had no photographs for the newspapers.

The pretender to the French throne is being sued by his wife for support and return of the large loans she has made him. As an evidence of his abilities to rule the destinies of a nation the suit is hardly what can be called a forcible endorsement.

PROFITABLE DAILY TITHING.

"Daily Heavenly Manna."

This little book is having the largest circulation of any of its kind and is conceded by Christians everywhere to be the most helpful.

If Christians allow the rush and crush of selfish ambition to deprive them of their daily portion of heavenly food, they must not be surprised if they grow spiritually leaner day by day, and if the peace of God gives place in their hearts to the discontent which is growing in the world, notwithstanding the multiplication of our comforts and privileges.

Daily Heavenly Manna contains a collection of Scripture texts with appropriate quotations for every day in the year. Surely the little tithes of time daily spent in partaking of its morsels of heavenly counsel cannot fail to profit all who partake. It is published to do good—not for profit.

Your Friends' Birth Dates.

An autograph and birthday record found in this book is a great convenience. Opposite each day of the year are blank lines upon which you can secure the autographs of your friends and be reminded of their birthdays as they occur. This makes the book more valuable yearly. In ten years you would not sell it for ten dollars.

Besides it has a place for Birth Records, Marriage Records and Death Records. Also it has a table showing the day of the week of any date for one hundred and fifty years.

HAIR DOESN'T DIE—IT HAS TO BE KILLED

Hair continues to grow and getting after the death of the body. But it is often killed through neglect or misuse. Almost always the woman or man whose hair is falling out, or is stringy, lifeless and dull-looking, is entirely to blame because of not giving it the proper care. It is easy to take care of the hair—easy to make it more beautiful. Use Harmony Hair Beautifier to make it glossy, soft and silky, and Harmony Shampoo to keep hair and scalp thoroughly clean.

Harmony Hair Beautifier, delightfully perfumed with true rose, is very easy to apply—simply sprinkle a little on your hair each time before brushing it. It contains no oil, and will not change the color of the hair, nor darken gray hair.

To keep your hair and scalp dandruff-free and clean, use Harmony Shampoo. This pure liquid shampoo is most convenient to use, giving an instantaneous rich, foaming lather that immediately penetrates to every part of the hair and scalp, insuring a quick and thorough cleansing. It was washed off just as quickly, the entire operation taking only a few moments. Contains nothing that can harm the hair, and leaves no harshness or stickiness—just a sweet cleanliness.

Both preparations come in odd-shaped, very ornamental bottles, with sprinkler tops. Harmony Hair Beautifier, $1.00. Harmony Shampoo, 50c. Both guaranteed to satisfy you in every way, or your money back. Sold in this community only at our store—The Retail Store—one of the more than 7,000 leading drug stores of the United States, Canada and Great Britain, which own the Hall's Harmony Laboratories in Boston, where the many celebrated Harmony Perfumes and Toilet Preparations are made.
